The Gender Equality Award	Multiple	Multiple	Norway	http://kvinneriforskning.no/english/award/	The Ministry of Education and Research in Norway has established a Gender Equality Award of two million Norwegian kroner to reward the research communities' gender equality efforts. The Gender Equality Award 2008 went to the University of Bergen and the Norwegian School of Economics and Business Administration. The award aims to increase the proportion of women in academic positions and thereby promote a better gender balance in academia, and is an addition to the resources that the institutions themselves have reserved for gender equality work.
Gender Equity Guidelines for Department Chairs	Continuous	Continuous	Washington, DC, USA	http://www.aaup.org/AAUP/issues/women/genequity.htm	Issues related to gender equity in the academy are significant not only for women faculty but for their departments, their institutions, and for the academic community. Women comprise a significant proportion of faculty in higher education, and if we do not provide women with equity, we risk losing a critical pool of talented individuals.

Surviving as a Woman in Science	2009/11/13	2009.11.13	UK, Hertfordshire	http://www.lifescienceevents.com/blog/_archives/2009/2/24/4102011.html	Do women make a difference to biology, and does biology make a difference to women? Professor Sian Harding, Imperial College, London. Working for 30 years in the London-based colleges has given me ample opportunity to observe the eco-systems of academia and the Darwinian struggle for survival. I will give a personal view of the roles of conscientiousness, risk taking, work, family, perception and fear of failure. I will consider whether science is a better or worse career than others for the advancement of women, and whether we have yet reached a plateau in what we can achieve.
